Looking forward to the IAAF World Indoor Championships Birmingham 2018

An outstanding IAAF World Championships London 2017, which played out over 10 days to full stadiums and a huge global TV audience, was the highlight of a busy competition year for athletics. But as one year draws to a close, another packed programme is on the horizon for 2018.

There will be five IAAF World Athletics Series events in 2018, starting with the IAAF World Indoor Championships Birmingham 2018 from 1-4 March. Later that month, on 24 March, Spain will host the IAAF/Trinidad Alfonso World Half Marathon Championships Valencia 2018, and it will be followed six weeks later by the IAAF World Race Walking Team Championships Taicang 2018 on 5-6 May.

During the summer, Finland plays host to the IAAF World U20 Championships Tampere 2018 and the track and field season will culminate with the IAAF Continental Cup Ostrava 2018.

And of course, throughout the year the world's leading athletes will compete in various annual series such as the IAAF Diamond League, the IAAF World Challenge, IAAF Label Road Races, the IAAF World Indoor Tour, the IAAF Combined Events Challenge, the IAAF Hammer Throw Challenge, the IAAF Race Walking Challenge and IAAF Cross Country Permit meetings.

Factoring in events such as the Commonwealth Games, Youth Olympic Games and various area championships, 2018 is set to be a busy and exciting year for athletics.
